A customer has two operating units: US and Ireland. A project that is set in the Ireland operating unit requires the services of employees from the US operating unit.

- B. Setup a new transaction source to receive Intercompany transactions in Ireland.
- C. Define provider controls in US and receiver controls in Ireland.
- D. For the project in Ireland, select "Allow Cross Charges to all Operating Units within Legal Entity".
- E. For the project in Ireland, set up transaction controls to allow charges from other operating units.

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

B: Provider and Receiver Controls Setup

For each provider operating unit or receiver operating unit involved in the cross charge, the Provider/Receiver Controls window Provider Controls and Receiver Controls tabs specify: The cross charge method to use to process intercompany cross charges and to override default cross charge method for inter-operating unit cross charges.

Attributes required for the provider operating unit to process intercompany billing to each receiver operating unit. This includes the Intercompany Billing Project and Invoice Group.

Attributes required for the receiver operating unit to process intercompany billing from each provider operating unit. This includes the supplier site, expenditure type and expenditure organization.

*(C)Intercompany Billing Accounting Companies choose the intercompany billing method largely due to legal and statutory requirements. When you use this method, Oracle Projects generates physical invoices and corresponding accounting entries at legal transfer prices between the internal seller(provider) and buyer (receiver) organizations when they cross a legal entity boundary or operating units.

*(D)Overview of Cross Charge When projects share resources within an enterprise, it is common to see those resources shared across organization and country boundaries. Further, project managers may also divide the work into multiple projects for easier execution and management. The legal, statutory, or managerial accounting requirements of such projects often present complex operational control, billing, and accounting challenges.

Oracle Projects enables companies to meet these challenges by providing timely information for effective project management. Project managers can easily view the current total costs of the project, while customers receive bills as costs are incurred, regardless of who performs the work or where it is performed.
