- A. ApplicationCache
- B. ViewState
- C. OutputCache
- D. MemoryCache

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

Scenario: When home.aspx is displayed, the rendered page must be cached for 10 minutes.

The output of an action method on a controller can be cached using the [OutputCache] attribute on the method.

Actions methods that return views will have the rendered page cached, while methods returning JSON data will have that data saved. A number of properties on the OutputCacheAttribute class control how data is cached.

CacheProfile- If a number of methods will have the same cache settings, it makes sense to use the web.config file to create a cache profile that can be used across all these methods.

The Duration attribute of the CacheProfile determines how long, in seconds, the output should be cached. To save an item for 10 minutes, duration would be set to 600.

[OutputCache(Duration=600)]
