NEW QUESTION: 3
The characteristics and traits of an individual that when aggregated could reveal the identity of that person. are known as:
A. Indirect identifications
B. Indirect Identity Marks
C. Indirect indicators
D. Indirect Identifiers
Answer: D
Explanation:
Indirect identifiers typically consist of demographic or socioeconomic information, dates, or events.
Although each standalone indirect identifier cannot identify the individual, the risk is that combining a number of indirect identifiers with external data can result in exposing the subject of the information.
For example, imagine a scenario in which users were able to combine search engine data, coupled with online streaming recommendations to tie back posts and recommendations to individual users on a website.
